Summary:

In Canmore, a group of 10 Bow Valley residents met at the Alpine Club of Canada. They represented community groups, artists, city council, the tourism industry, the mountain guide community, small businesses, and ecological science. This group was passionate about environmental and social issues in the community and identified economic diversity, noise pollution, urban planning, transportation, wildlife conservation and social services as issues of concern. The group arrived at a common vision for the future that focused on creating a diverse community with services, support and employment that would allow people of all ages and backgrounds to live comfortably and sustainably in the Bow Valley.

The key characteristics that the group outlined and agreed upon over the course of the visioning session.
